The Civil Justice Reform ("CJR") in Hong Kong and Practice Direction 31 ("PD31") of the Judiciary (2 January 2010) encourages litigants to explore mediation to resolve their differences.

Mediation has since been used to a much greater extent in Hong Kong. The international trend of using Mediation to resolve disputes is catching on quickly in Hong Kong and becoming "mainstream". Anyone who is involved in dispute resolution should understand what Mediation is all about or be left behind.

This is an intensive 5-day Mediation Training Course (accredited by Hong Kong Mediation Accreditation Association Limited (HKMAAL)) designed by ADRIL to provide the necessary theory and skills to business professionals who are interested in understanding Negotiation and Mediation and / or wish to be accredited by as a Mediator. This course is offered in collaboration with the Association of International Accountants.

About the Organiser: ADR International Limited (“ADRIL”)

ADR International Limited was set up in 2002 to provide neutrals (arbitrators, mediators, experts, adjudicators) and advise clients on the most cost-effective alternative dispute resolution (ADR) process for their particular dispute. ADRIL also assists companies and governments to train their staff on ADR processes and techniques. The organisation has successfully organized Hong Kong International Arbitration Centre ("HKIAC") Accredited Mediation Courses in Hong Kong and has trained over 1,000 senior civil servants in Hong Kong on dispute resolution. ADRIL has been contracted by the Government of Macau (since 2009) to train more than hundreds of senior civil servants, lawyers, judges and business leaders as mediators.

THE COURSE

The Course Requirements

Anyone regardless of their current profession is eligible as a candidate for accreditation as a mediator.

Completion of this course satisfies the course requirements (Stage I) of the HKMAAL and the International Negotiation Mediation Institute ("NMI") to become an Accredited Mediator (after completion of Stage II and III of the requirements-<http://www.hkmaal.org.hk/en/MediationinHongKong.php>) of HKMAAL and NMI.

The course leaders are leading international mediation trainers and consultants with extensive experience in the field to bring more depth and insight to the participants. The course applies interactive learning concepts introducing theory interlaced with games, videos, exercises and role plays to help participants develop techniques and skills.

ADRIL aims to create excellence and enrollment is strictly limited to enhance better group interaction. The courses offered by ADRIL have received consistently excellent ratings by the participants, who are generally seasoned professionals in their respective field.

At the conclusion of the course, the “Mediation Process” as taught during the 5 days, is examined by a roster of assessors consisting of trainers of the course as well as experience peers. The soft skills and techniques of a successful mediator are discussed and explored with exercises and role plays. The course also introduces concepts of Conflict and the various methods of resolving disputes (ADR Spectrum). Negotiation concepts are explored and Principled Interest-Based Negotiation is introduced. Over a dozen exercises, games and role plays are interspersed throughout the 5 days to ensure a dynamic, challenging and engaging experience. All the mediation role plays are coached by experienced Accredited Mediators.
